

Black Creek (September 23 & 24) Black Creek is a good-timey folk/rock/country band that's working its way to the top. Notable is the group's banjo work, for where so many groups today play at the banjo, this group approaches the instrument with both the depth of feeling and good humour that is required.

BLACK CREEK

Steeped in that swing beat so common to the form, accentuated by some hearty banjo picking that plays blues notes and offbeat ragtimey solos, Black Creek has been winning audiences everytime they appear. Group members are Dave Pearce, Mark Haines, Steve Goldberger, Jayce Ford and Marty Posen, and they make up a band that even the most avid believers in tried and true traditional forms have to like — because what they do works so well musically and is so completely downright entertaining.

Black Creek is an energetic group that starts off with a modern bluegrass stance that widens to a full-spread electric erection under the drive of Mark Haines' electric fiddle and Beezlebub guitar. The group won an ETROG [whatever that is] for their 1975 film score for 'Lions for Breakfast'.*
